watching these developments close to their southern frontiers, he said. The Communist Party Secretary also told China that Moscow was ready to coexist, if that was as far as it could go with another Com-munist power, but that it was up to Peking to react to long-standing Soviet proposals,

Speaking for about 90 minutes in his first major speech of the year to some 5,000 delegates at the opening session of the Congress of Soviet Trade Unions, he also condemned West German opponents of Bonn's non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw.

Premier Alexei Kosygin and other notables on the dais behind him, Mr. Brezhnev said that only the future actions of China and the U.S. would make it possible to take a stand on the significance of the Nixon visit to Peking.

Better relations with the U.S. were not only possible but desirable, and much depended on them. However, they should not be at the expense third powers, the party chief declared.

Mr. Brezhnev, who was speaking shortly after the Soviet negotiator returned to Peking for the pro-tracted Sinc-Soylet border baks. incurred the reference to coexistence the U.S.-Chinese communique. "However, it is important not just to write these principles on paper, but to carry them out in reality,"

Moscow was ready to translate them into concrete proposals: non-aggression, non-use of force, settlement of border questions and improvement of relations on a mutually beneficial basis. "It is up to the Chinese side," he added.

The party chief warned West Germany's Christian Democratic opposition that the frontiers of Communist Europe were "unshakeable." They talked of revising articles referring to the frontier in the 1970 Soviet-West German non-aggression pact, but "there is and there will be no one to discuss it with."

He reaffirmed the Soviet Union's "internationalist duty" to help the peoples of Indo-China and said "we will fulfill it to the end." Mr. Brezhnev said the Soviet Union "wrathfully condemns the bandit bombings of North Vietnamese territory by American planes and demands an end to them."

He said the Soviet Union also demands withdrawal of "the interventionists from Indo-China and we demand that the people of the area become independent, get a possibi-lity to shape their own destiny themselves without any interference and outside pressure whatsoever."

SHLOMO Alva has for years been one of the leading artists of Britain, whose many exhibitions there and on the Continent have won him recognition among critics and collectors as a painter with a highly individual abstract style. In his 70th year he has produced a series of studies of the nude which could be equalled by few indeed among contemporary artists, but which at first glance look like a complete break with most of what has come from his brush and pencil

Far from being abstract, the 48 paintings and drawings reproduced in this volume are full-bodied and sensuous, signalling, one might say, the joy of the artist's return to warm and human realities.

The break with his past, however, is more apparent than real. Where in all this, it may be asked, does Alva the essentialist survive? The answer is surely in his absolute concentration on his theme and his Baudelairean refusal to consider any part of it as out of bounds to his pencil or brush. His essentialism also governs his rejection of all ornamental or utilitarian props. His figures, even when most earthy, float in a background of opulent colour.

Meaning of erotic

Collis considers these studies in general erotic. It ail depends on the meaning of erotic. Some of these paintings are as exploratory as an anatomist's drawings. Does the added sensuousness of the artist (Collis prefers the word "sensuality") make them erotic? It is axiomatic that the way to the spirit is through the flesh, for without the flesh there is nothing. And who can deny that Alva's seated, standing, leaping and recumbent nudes reach towards a spiritual idea and even get it? Aiva does not always see his women in pretty poses; but then the artist is not interested in mere prettiness. He is interested rather in the challenge to his power as a modeller, and Alva's modelling is rarely less than brilliant.

BOYS TOWN LAUNCHES NEW JUNIOR HIGH

FOR UNDER-PRIVILEGED YOUTH

At first the Katamon youngsters, aged 12 and 13, were so unruly that the bus drivers refused to transport them on their daily journey across town. Bayit Vegan neighbours complained of rowdyism. Even instructors almost threw their hands up in desperation at the seemingly impossible task of maintaining order among Rabbi Shmuel Horovicz, Chicagoeducated principal of the Junior High School, attributes the change to the dedication of the faculty. The boys responded to their teachers and counsellors in a natural human desire to return good for good. The Biblical and Taimudic precept of "Love Thy Neighbour" is translated into dayby-day relationships between students, their teachers and their families.

And it worked.

A case in point: Yosef Eliav, the boys' carpentry teacher, is a graduate of Boys Town. Raised on a meagre farm, the son of poor Persian kumigrants, he saw in the Katamon children a throwback to his own childhood days. Yosef lavished love on his charges; and as the weeks went by, he won their admiration and respect. Chaos and destructiveness gave way to mutual help and self-discipline.

Five months later, Yosef invited Rabbi Linchner to distribute prizes to his class. First prize went to Ovadia, a lad known for his past record of delinquency. most important thing we've all learned," Rabbi Linchner said, "is to help one another, to work together, to co-

The Katamon Story is the latest in the saga of this unique educational institution launched in Jerusalem in 1949.

Starting with ten printing students, Boys Town has grown into a student body of 1,002. More than half of the students are taking vocational courses, in addition to academic subjects, and specializing in one of four training programmes of technology electronics, fine mechanics, furniture design and graphic arts.

The student body includes 35 varied communal backgrounds. Seventy-two per cent of the students come from Oriental families, most of them disadvantaged. Pupils come from 97 cities, towns and villages in Israel, and over 500 reside at the school's dormitories. The Bayit Vegan ten-acre campus includes technical facilities, an academic building with classrooms, library, dining hall, synagogue, a junior high building, five residence halls, and athletic fields. The maintenance budget is $1 million, with all of the boys re-celving scholarship aid.

A development programme to cost upwards of 3 million dollars will double Boys Town's capacity to help more boys from Katamon and similar backgrounds. It calls for the construction of a 1,000student residential complex, facilities for the Institute of Applied Engineering, a Computer centre, a gymnasium, swimming pool and programmed machine tool laboratories. The programme will be carried to completion within the next 3 years.

He had an extraordinary aspect of placidity, as if anger were be-youd him. He could enunciate fanatical view to which he was opposed with a startling objectivity that was almost clinical. But to who knew him well, beyond the wall of his second reticence. it was evident that deep storms could surge within him; and that he was suppressing them for our comfort — and at his own high expense.

Self abnegation is counted a large virtue, but as I look back I some times regret his mastery of it. He was always pouring himself, with utter devotion, for two decades into someone who held a higher official responsibility, I often talked with him about whether and when he would stand apart, fully visible and specific in his own identity; for service is one thing and leadership another, and he was fully capable of both.

It was then that he would expose his full concern about a strange ruthlessness that had invaded some sectors of our public life. And with the concern came a doubt whether he would wish to incur all the turbulence of an arena in which "the race is to the swift" and not always to the straight, the erudite and the wise. He had much inner strength, but was never free from an air of vulnerability.

"Psychic shock"

To the Editor of the Jernsalem Post Sir, - Leonard Schroter's "Anxious in Arad" (March 3) highlights serious weaknesses in our entire system of reception of immigrants in general.

The procedure at Lod must be a psychic shock. An air terminal is not a dispersal depot, nor for that matter are the docks at Haifa.

All immigrants should be taken to reception depots, allowed to rest and-or visit relatives for a day or two. Expected rise Few people expect wages actually to remain within the range envisaged by the basic accord, i.e. a rise of no more than, say, 10 per cert. An average rise by about twice as much in the course of 1972 is widely expected by both employees and employers, but for the time being no account is being taken of it in actual costing, pricing and investment planning. Should it eventually take place with retro-active force, the effects could be explosive. One cannot help wondering what is going to happen next.

In trying to answer that ques-tion one has to keep in mind the change that has taken place in trade union strategy. In the past, the unions' demands were coordinated under the Histadrut umbrella, and wage tariffs were raised more or less uniformly. Though deviations could not be avoided in practice, they used to be regarded as special cases.

STRIKE BILL IS ALL ABOUT

On the other hand, everything depends on the employer. Nothing will happen if a strike breaks out against the rules and nobody takes court action.

Dock strikes

Affected under this would be stoppages like the recent dock strikes and the go-slow applied by income tax men but not the bakers' slowdown, because their dispute was in the private sector. Nor does the Bill affect business undertakings in public ownership.
Nevertheless Mr. Ben-Israel

points out that a contract exists between the Histadrut and the Manufacturers' Association, signed in 1967. It stipulates that all strikes require Histadrut approval and that strikes in breach of a collective agreement are forbidden. No employer has seen fit to sue in the courts so far. A test case would show whether this document invalidates the immunity which strikers in private firms enjoy (under the Collective Agreements Act and other laws).

The Government has made a formal statement in the Knesset that it will not pay employees for idle time if they should be engaged in strike action that is illegal under the terms of the Bill Illegal strikers will not be entitled to unemployment pay, expected to be introduced shortly in another measure now

TOM Okker captured the $10,000 top prize in the Kemper International Open Tennis Tournament Sunday with a 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 triumph over Arthur Ashe in the finals of the week-long $50,000 match.

Okker, upset over a double fault call with the first set tied at 4all, appeared rattled, and Ashe held his service to win the set.

But the Dutchman rallied from another double fault in the first game of the second set to overtake Ashe in the fourth game with two top and forchand smashes and a passing backhand to gain a break. In the second set's sixth game. Ashe had a 30-love advantage, but Okker deuced the game that broke Ashe again, Ashe suffered a third straight service break when BEIT-EL. — Driving rain and hail yesterday caught more than 20,000 marchers strung out through the hills of northern Judea on the first day of this year's Three-Day March.

Most marchers spent at least two hours moving through the downpour in open country, pelted by the hall and soaked by the rain. They arrived back in the marchers' encampment here to find that it had been turned into a quagmire in which it was difficult to walk without slipping. Many of the marchers were too exhausted when they crawled into their pup tents to change into dry clothing.
Some did not make it back to camp until 5 p.m., almost 12 hours after starting out. Not since 1964 has rain interfered with the Three-Day March, and veteran marchers do not remember the weather ever turning so unkind during the event. There was light rain in the area yesterday evening but there will be zo change in the march programme. Local rain is forecast for today. Alug-Mishne Gershon Peled, the march commander, said that only 25 marchers had fallen out yesterday and that the rain had not seriously affected the march. However, by early afternoon, some marchers had begun leaving camp with their gear, to spend the night under

WELCOMED BY ARABS

Apart from the weather, the most notable aspect of yesterday's march, the fifth since the Six Day War, was the warmth with which it was received by the population of the Arab villages through which it passed. In the previous three marches held in the West Bank, women and children frequently turned out to. watch, but few men appeared. Those who did, appeared impassive, if not hostile.

Yesterday, however, the local residents, including the menfolk, were out in force and responded to the colourful pageant. In some of the villages, none of the children seemed to be in school or any of the men working, all turning out instead to watch the march-past.

The men appeared relaxed, sometimes laughing at the outlandish costumes. In a large house in the village of Mazraat E-Sharkiya. women and children crowded an unper balcony while on a large bal-cony below them a line of elders sat sipping coffee and watching the parade with a judicial air as if weighing the performance of the various marching contingents.

Villagers sold soft drinks and ice cream on the roadside. The weather was warm and pleasant when 22,000 marchers - 3,000 fewer than had registered — set out from the Beit El encampment at 5:30. The 38-kilometre route took them north to the fringe of Samaria and then back south.

EXPLANATORY SIGNS

Signs along the roadside explained something of the villages and countryside along the way and guides with loudspeakers were posted at several points to provide oral explanations. The marchers passed the Christian Arab village of Ain Sinya, where the family of former Premier Moshe Sharett had lived during 1908-1910 and Jifna, believed to be the place to which the Temple priests fled during Titus' siege of Jerusalem 1,900 years ago.

A cooling breeze came up with the sun to make ideal marching weather, but it proved to be a harbinger of the rain which struck the column about 11 o'clock. Some of the contingents kept up their stride but many others, as well as individual marchers, sought cover beneath sparsely spaced trees or in the porticos of Arab houses, where they were welcomed by the residents.

Foreign accents and flags were liberally sprinkled along the line of march, particularly that of Switzerland, whose 550-man contingent is the largest of the foreign groups. Israel's marathon walking chamrion, Dr. Shaul Ladany, performed is usual double circuit — comple-ing the 58-kilometres before most parchers had gotten halfway, then spruce, orderly and good-humoured

Gadna off todav

By SUSAN BELLOS

Thousands of Gadna high school purpils wallowed in thick mud and rain and were assailed by thunder and lightning as they assembled in Emek Zion, the wadi between the Hebrew University and Beit Hakerem. Gadna members, who are all under 18, will march 27 kms.

However, in spite of the furious weather the teenagers seemed to be and looked almost sparkling with their red and blue tents and flags. Some Jerusalem Gadna members were in luck when a few anxious parents turned up with a change of socks and sweaters.

fact the Gadna members looked much more cheerful and efficient than the rather ragged army unit parked next to them, who scuttled into their tents at the first clap of thunder.

Among those marching with the Gadna are Druse and Arab teenagers and a group from a Bethlehem nigh school. The marchers start at Nebi Samwil this morning, carry on through Mevasseret Yerushalayim and Beit Zayit. They enter Jerusalem via Bethlehem and Katamon on Wednesday.
